Woodruff's Confession

He Tells What He Knows of the Cronin Murder.

A LONG AND COMPLETE STORY.

He implicates Alexander Sullivan, Detective Coughlin, the Man Melville or Maroney, P. O. Sullivan, McDougall, Otherwise Known as Williams, and Others.

CHICAGO, June 17.—Woodruff, the horse thief, who is implicated in the Cronin murder, has made a full confession of his connection with the assassination, and in substance it is as follows: He arrived in Chicago on March 26 last, and soon after made the acquaintance of P. O. Sullivan, the ice man.

He met Detective Coughlin, whom he had known by reputation as a "fence," a few days later. The man Melville, who is supposed to be Maroney, arrived in Chicago about this time, and Woodruff saw him drinking with Coughlin in a saloon. The three men had several drinks together, when they left the saloon, Coughlin separating from Woodruff and Melville, the latter going to another saloon, and after that Melville said he had to go to McCoy's hotel, where he was stopping, and left Woodruff. Just as they separated Melville told Woodruff he wanted to see him again and gave him a few dollars, and added: "You needn't be broke as long as I am in town."

On the day following Woodruff met Mike McDougall, in company with Coughlin. As Woodruff approached he overheard Coughlin say, "Good, he is just the man I want to see."

"Turning to McDougall, he said, 'Are you acquainted?' I replied, 'I guess I ought to know Mac.' McDougall turned to me and said, 'That will do, my name is Williams.'

"I laughed and said, 'A rose by any other name would probably be as sweet.' I had known McDougall, or as he now called himself, Williams, as a rough-and-ready spirit, and an old worker for the Clan-na-Gael, although during the immediate time he had worked as a blacksmith. Coughlin and McDougall had quite a talk while I waited. After a talk which I did not hear, Coughlin left, saying he had some business. As soon as Coughlin was out of sight Williams said to me, 'Come on.' We went over on the West Side and stayed for an hour or two drinking beer.

"Williams had been paying for the drinks during the afternoon, and he asked me: 'How are you fixed?' I said: 'I am nearly busted.' He said: 'You are a d—n fool.' I replied that it was mighty hard time to make a dollar unless you took desperate chances, and I was not quite prepared to do that. He said: 'Why don't you go down and see Alexander Sullivan?' and I said I was not prepared to be sent to Europe. Williams turned to me, and looking me squarely in the face, said it would not be necessary for me to be sent out of town in this case. I asked him: 'What is there anything on now?' He laughed and said we seemed to be living pretty well. He said: 'I have rooms—I have a flat—in fact, I have rooms to let.' I said: 'Good; I'll come and stop with you.' 'All right, come to-night.'

"It was between 12 and 1 o'clock when we arrived at 117 South Clark street. We went up-stairs and Williams lit the lamp. He said: 'What do you think of a man who can sit here and smoke ten cent cigars and pay for smoking them?' Then he added: 'There's something good going on.' Referring to a copy of a conspiracy pamphlet lying on the table, I asked: 'Has this anything to do with it?' 'You needn't guess again,' Williams replied. 'Tell me something about this thing.' I said: 'You needn't know anything about it. It is a deal, and you will not be implicated.' Turning around and looking me straight in the face, he asked: 'Are you one of them?' He referred to my helping the Fenians at the time of the Canada raid. I replied 'I am, as much as I ever was, if I am paid for it. I have been playing in desperate hard luck.' After talking until about 3 o'clock we went to bed. I got up at 9 o'clock the next morning.

"This must have been about the 20th of April. I looked about for some place to wash. For the first time I noticed how scantily the room was furnished. I said: 'You have lots of room, but very little furniture.' Williams laughed, and replied: 'Yes, but I've a house in the country with a d—n sight less in it.' I asked him where it was. He said: 'Never mind; it is just out here in the country.'

"We went into the New Haven restaurant and had breakfast. I said to him: 'I have got to go to the barn,' meaning Dean's. He replied: 'I won't keep you but a little while. You can do better than you are doing there. Why don't you go and see Alexander Sullivan?'

"I went to Dean's barn and thought the matter over and then returned and applied at Alexander Sullivan's, giving as an excuse to Dean that I was going down to the postoffice. Alexander Sullivan was not in, but going out I met him in the hall before I reached the elevator. I said: 'Mr. Sullivan, McDougall sent me over to see you.' Mr. Sullivan said: 'McDougall? Oh, you mean Williams, don't you?' I said: 'Yes, I guess so. I slept with him last night. He wanted me to go over and have a talk with you.' Alexander Sullivan replied: 'I have nothing for you. I have never met you before.'

"Well, I said, 'I think I have met you before; although I may have grown out of your recollection since I came from Canada. I have but lately returned from California.' Sullivan repeated his first answer: 'I don't recollect you; I have never met you before.' I told him I was looking for a job, and Williams had recommended me to him. He said: 'No, I have no work for anybody. Are you a stranger here?' I said: 'Oh! I have only a few acquaintances.' He asked, 'What kind of work would you like?' I said, 'Anything in God's world if there is any money in it.' He looked at me sharply, and replied: 'If I hear of anything for you I will let Mr. Williams know, and walked away without even saying good-by to me.'

"I met Williams an hour afterward going out of his room on Clark street. We took a grip car and went over on the north side. I told him I had seen Sullivan, and what he said. We got off just before we got to Division street. We met Alexander Sullivan as we were coming out of a saloon. He took Williams to one side and took out a roll of bills. Taking several from the pile he handed them to Williams, saying, 'Now pay that rent.' They were on the outer edge of the sidewalk, perhaps ten feet from me. Sullivan saw me, and taking Williams he led him some four or five steps further away. They had quite a talk, and I knew from the way that Williams looked back and laughed that they were talking about me. They came back after talking some minutes, and Sullivan, approaching me, said, 'You must not take any offense at anything I said to-day as I was very busy and have a great many applications for jobs.' I said, 'That's all right,' and he laughed, walking rapidly ahead toward Clark street. I said to Williams, 'What did he say, anything about me?' Williams answered, 'No, not much; he doesn't have much to say, anyway.' I asked, 'Is he your banker?' He answered, 'He's good enough banker for us.' I then left Williams, and went back to Dean's stable.

"The following Wednesday, that is the Wednesday before the murder, I met Dan Coughlin on South State street. He asked me what I was doing and where I was living. I told him I was at Dean's livery stable. Coughlin asked me how I was fixed, and told me he would see me again. He called at the stable the Saturday following, and I went out with him and had a drink with him. We walked on together down toward Lincoln park. To go back—I remember now that I saw Williams on centennial day. He asked me whether I had seen Coughlin and I told him no, and asked him what was the use of them. He said: 'Oh, nothing' but I am in a hurry now.' I lost him in the crowd, and coming over to State street some one hit me on the shoulder. I turned and saw it was Coughlin. He asked me whether I had seen Williams. I told him where I had seen him. He then asked me to take a note over to Alexander Sullivan. He wrote a note in alphabetical cipher. I understood the cipher, as it was the same that was used by the Fenians when I was stationed at Niagara. The principle was the employment of every seventh letter from the one intended. He told me to take it up to Sullivan's office. I asked him if, in case Sullivan was not in, whether I should leave the letter. He told me no, to tear it up if I could not deliver it to Sullivan personally. I did not do this, and the letter reads: 'Going up to P. O. Sullivan's.'

"To come down to the night of the murder: After meeting Coughlin we walked toward Lincoln Park. He asked me if I could get a horse and wagon that night, something that would carry a trunk. I informed him that we had a light rig in the stable. He said that was just the thing. He told me there was $25 in it for me if I could get the horse and wagon, and have it in a designated spot on Lincoln avenue before 2 o'clock the next morning. That evening I stayed around the stable, playing cards with a Mr. Senica, a man named Howard and another named Bates. We played until 10:30 or 11 o'clock. Bates went away at about 11 o'clock, and I waited an hour and a half and then led the gray mare down the stairs. I put a blanket ahead of her, over which she walked to prevent the noise. There is no truth in any story that her feet were covered with pads. I had left the wagon in the alley and I hitched up and drove up Lincoln avenue.

"When Coughlin paid me the $25 he informed me that I would be met at Lincoln avenue by two men. I was to approach them and inquire of them where Frank Williams lived. They would then get into the buggy with me. On arriving near Ashland avenue and Lincoln two men jumped into the wagon without a word. I recognized one of them as a man by the name of O'Shea, alias Mike McDougall, who was a machinist or blacksmith from Philadelphia. I had known him in Wichita, Kan. McDougall is a man about five feet six inches in height, from 40 to 45 years old, and wears a nearly black mustache. Both his hair and mustache are turning gray. The other man was Melville. Melville is about five feet eleven inches. He is a heavy built, thick-set man. I have met him in Peoria in connection with Irish matters.

"They ordered me to turn to the right on Ashland avenue, and directed me to drive right up to the cottage. The two men then jumped out and went in. There was a dim light in the front room. After waiting a few minutes—I think it must have been nearly 2 o'clock—P. O. Sullivan, Melville and Williams came out of the door carrying a trunk between them. They lifted the trunk into the wagon, and Melville and Williams jumped into the seat with me. I drove across Fullerton avenue. I was going very fast at that time, and the horse was on a lope. A policeman near there came out and called: 'Hello! Stop!' Melville said in an undertone: 'Go on, for God's sake, go on.' I had the reins twisted around my wrists, and loosened them, letting the horse take a fearful gallop. We went down to Lincoln park, across Clark street, and crossed it a little north of the animal's cage. This road winds around about fifty yards from the head of the drive. There is a little hill there, on the top of which are a number of trees.

"They ordered me to stop there, and at that time it was intended to take the trunk into the lake, as I heard them say they had spotted a boat for that purpose during the day. They took the trunk out, but Melville became frightened, thinking that a policeman was perhaps following. They lifted the trunk back into the wagon and told me to drive on. I asked: 'Where shall I go?' Melville said, 'Anywhere, just keep moving; I am afraid we are being followed.' Williams turned to Melville, and said: 'Good God, the sewer is just as good a place as any.' The first sewer we came to, Melville said to me: 'This will do.'

"Melville and Williams jumped out. I went to the horse's head. Melville took hold of the trunk on the top, but could not lift it, and called to Williams to help him. Melville jumped into the wagon and lifted one end of the trunk near the wheel. Williams grabbed it by the handle, gave it a jerk and threw it to the ground. The weight of the body raised the lid. The trunk was not turned over, nor was the body thrown out. They carried the trunk to the sewer, and tried to crowd it all down. I heard Williams say, 'We can't dump it in.'

"The next thing I saw they had lifted the trunk lengthwise and let the body drop head foremost into the sewer. They then tried to crowd the trunk in after the body. Finding they could not do this, Melville said, 'We can take this back and burn it.' Williams said, 'We can't burn it at once.' At this time I called out, 'Get in, for God's sake, and let's get back.'

"We drove back to Edgewater, where Williams and Melville got out and started for the lake, carrying a little medicine case, which had been lying at our feet. While they were down there, I saw some one approach. The man was perhaps twenty or thirty feet away from me when I first saw him. I pulled the reins upon the mare, at the same time calling 'Whoa,' loud enough to be heard some distance. In a still louder tone of voice I called out: 'Hello; good evening.' I saw then he was a policeman. He exclaimed: 'Isn't this a pretty late hour to be out?' I said: 'Yes; I have lost my way and am looking for the Lake Shore drive.' Just then Melville and Williams came up from the lake and Melville said: 'I can't find any road.'

"The policeman told us we would have to go back on Evanston avenue. At this time the trunk was in the wagon. After Melville got into the wagon he rubbed his hands together and knocked considerable sand over my clothes. From this I was satisfied that they had buried the instruments near that spot. They did not bring them back with them. We then turned cityward, by way of Evanston avenue. After driving a short distance, Melville said to Williams: 'I wonder whether that d—n fool will see to the cottage and cover up things, or whether he will get scared.' Williams said: 'I think Annie will come over and help him. She has more nerve than he has.'

"After going a short distance, I pulled up, as I thought I heard the sound of wheels in the gravel. We were then on a country cross road. I called out: 'Listen.' We heard the sound of wheels plainly, and I said: 'There comes a team.' Williams said: 'My God, so there is.' I said: 'Let's get rid of this trunk. It looks suspicious from the outside.' Williams got out and took the trunk, carrying it to the fence and high bushes and threw it over. He came back and I walked the horse a short distance until the team had passed out of hearing. We came back by way of Ashland avenue, and went past the cottage. As we passed we saw a woman going in the back way. Just before we reached Webster avenue, I asked Melville, 'What about the clothes, have you got rid of them?' He said: 'Oh! that's all right, we'll attend to them.' Then turning to Williams he said: 'You had better go out to the house to-morrow and see that things are cleared up.' Williams replied: 'No, we have been around there enough already. We will let Dan attend to that.'

"At that time we were near Belden avenue, and I turned to Melville and asked: 'Are you going right down to the barn with me?' He answered: 'No, are we near there?' and I said yes. They then got out. I said to them: 'I will see you to-morrow.' Melville answered: 'I don't know, I may not be in town. You have as good a scheme as you want now.' I asked what that was, and he replied: 'You won't need any training to work Aleck.' I said: 'Well, I suppose I stand in with you?' He replied: 'No, you don't stand in on our bet. It is every man for himself now.' As they left me, Williams said: 'Don't strike him too heavy; there is a good many of us.' I replied: 'Yes, the man would have to be a millionaire to take care of this crowd. I will hunt you up to-morrow.'

"That day I staid at the barn. The mare was taken out that morning by a tall man wearing a plug hat. He is well known by Dean. When he came back he complained that it was not the same horse he had before. The man said it did not drive like the one he had always had. The following Tuesday night I went to McCoy's hotel to find Melville, but was unable to do so. Wednesday morning I took the horse and buggy over to the South Side, intending to see Melville and Alexander Sullivan and get some money, but could see neither of them. Then I drove to Foley's stable and offered to trade the horse and was arrested. This is the first and only statement I have made since my arrest. It contains substantially all the facts in my knowledge, and I have determined to make a clean breast of this matter now."

GREECE AND RUSSIA UNITED.

Grand Duke Paul, Nephew of the Czar, Marries Princess Alexandra of Greece. A Great Event in Russia—Stanley Heard From Again—Other Foreign Dispatches.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 17.—The marriage of the Grand Duke Paul, nephew of the czar, to the Princess Alexandra of Greece was celebrated at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the chapel of the Winter palace. There was a brilliant gathering of officers and diplomats in full uniform. The ladies present wore mediaeval Russian dresses. The bride's dress was of silk mohair, embroidered with silver flowers. She wore her hair in long flowing curls, the traditional marriage custom among the Russians, and upon her head was the heavy gold crown, studded with gems, worn by all Romanoff brides for a century or more.

There was a grand state dinner at the palace in the evening in honor of the event and the czar toasted the happy pair. The dinner was followed by a ball and when the festivities were concluded the bride and groom departed for their residence on the Neva quay. They were escorted thither by the wedding guests, and amid the vociferous congratulations of hundreds of cheery voices and the din of martial music the newly wedded pair were set down at their own door.

At yesterday's procession in St. Petersburg in honor of the marriage, the city was decorated for a coronation and the attending ceremonies were brilliant in the extreme. At Moscow the whole city was decked holiday attire and the people paraded the streets to commemorate the nuptials of a Romanoff.

Cubmen's Strike Breaking Up.

PARIS, June 17.—The strike of the cabmen in this city is apparently beginning to break up. Some of the men who went out with the others on the first day of the strike have again resumed their employment, and quite a number of these are on the streets to-day with their cabs. The others, however, remain firm and insist they will not resume work until the authorities yield to their demands. The ministry totally ignores their request for another interview.

MONDAY, JUNE 17, 1889.

The ticket is a strong one—one of the very strongest ever nominated in Mason County.

COLONEL JOHN YOUNG BROWN says he is a candidate for Governor, and Judge Durham is in the hands of his friends.

The fight Saturday was among Democrats. The contest in August, 1890, will be against "our friends, the enemy." There is ample time to marshal the forces and present a solid front to the Republicans.

COLONEL BRECKINRIDGE says he is not a gubernatorial candidate. The Democrats need the Colonel's services at Washington more than at Frankfort, and they will be glad to learn that he is content with his present position.

"PATRICK WARD, the well-known Irish politician, who committed suicide at Indianapolis because he failed to receive an office from Mr. Harrison, was a prosperous man before he deserted Democracy. He did yeoman service for Tilden and Hendricks in Indiana during the famous 1875 campaign." Here's a solemn warning to all Democrats who think of deserting the cause—if any such there be.

SAYS the New York World: "A Republican organ now avers that the Democratic doctrine, if carried out, would be 'a serious blow to the manufacturers of the South.' But last year, during the campaign, this same organ insisted that the Mills bill was drawn by 'rebel brigadiers' in the interest of the South and as a 'serious blow' to the manufacturers of the North. The fact is that tariff reduction and an enlarged free list would benefit both sections. And it is bound to come."

Stock, Field and Farm.

The cotton acreage of the whole South this year is 20,309,480 acres, being an increase of 464,050 acres.

Winona, Pa., eighty blooded horses brought a total of $43,000. Empire Wilkes, the trotting stallion, was sold to Kentucky parties for $8,000. Most of purchases went to Kentucky.

If all reports are true the "plant lice" are destroying a great deal of wheat in Central Kentucky. The insect penetrates the husk of the grain with its slender beak and feeds on the juices of the inclosed kernel, causing the same to die. The presence of the grain louse in a growing crop and in a large numbers, is a rather serious matter, as they increase with fearful rapidity, three and sometimes more broods appearing in one month. No successful mode of extermination is known. The so-called 'lady-bugs' and ichneumon flies prey on them and destroy great numbers.

The Misses Young's School.

The closing exercises of the Misses Young's school took place Friday morning at their residence on Fourth street. This school—under the control of these two cultivated women—deserves special mention, as it has been growing in number and interest for the past five years, and is now an established seminary, where a preparatory course is taught, enabling the student to enter any collegiate institute in the Union. The newest methods are adopted and intelligent training is given with conscientious care to each pupil, and the patrons have from year to year expressed themselves as well pleased with the progress of their children.

Following is a programme of the closing on Friday, the exercises consisting principally of recitations:

"The Way to Win."—Andrew Rogers.

 Contata—"Fairy Land."—School.
 Queen—Beatrice Pollitt.
 Solos by Beba Nolin, Nettie Roe, and Ida May Alexander.

Mary Sulser received the prize for prompt attendance, never having lost a day. The following drew for second prize, being detained by sickness only: Harry Fitzgerald, May Fitzgerald, John Power, Mary Wood, Emma Wood and Florence Rogers. John Power drew the prize. The school will open the first Monday in September.

THE WINNERS.

Phister, Pearce, Alexander, Newell, Blatterman, Kirk, Cockrell and Everett.

Result of the Democratic Primary Election Last Saturday.

The Democratic primary election is over and the ticket for August, 1890, is named.

Sheriff Alexander and Coroner Cockrell had no opposition, but the contest for most of the other places on the ticket was one of the liveliest in the political history of the county.

The principal fight was that for the Clerkship. All eyes were centered on the contest between Pearce and Parker. The Pearce crowd were full of confidence on the eve of the election, and took all the bets they could get. While Parker's friends did not seem so confident, still they were not slow in accepting even money on their favorite. Both sides were well organized, and were abundantly supplied with the "sinews of war," if half the reports are true. The fight was hot from the first. Parker's friends stood manfully to him, but they were no match for the other side. When the polls closed at noon Pearce had won the race. Parker's friends realized this and the fight from that on was not so interesting.

Phister made a gallant fight for the Judgeship, and came out with colors flying at the head of the procession, having carried nearly every precinct in the county and having polled the largest vote of any man in the race who had opposition. His opponent, Judge Coons, was handicapped by the third-term business.

County Attorney Newell made a winning fight for re-election. His majority is larger than it was four years ago.

For Superintendent of Schools, Mr. G. W. Blatterman came out winner, but the vote was close.

Mr. Robert C. Kirk's friends were confident all along that he would get the nomination for Jailor, but he surprised many by his big vote. He has a majority over all three of his opponents. Mr. Kirk is a runner from way back.

Mr. John C. Everett went into the contest with his forces thoroughly organized, and came out with colors flying. His opponents were both strong men, and Mr. Everett is being congratulated on the gallant fight he made.

Following is the official returns:

Railway News.

Franklin County has delivered her subscription of $100,000 to the Kentucky Midland.

The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal stockholders have decided to repair the property. It will take $300,000 to do it.

The C. & O. had two excursion trains out yesterday, one from Portsmouth to Cincinnati, the other from Cincinnati to Portsmouth.

The Enquirer says Mr. L. G. Rawn will succeed J. W. Sherwood as Superintendent of Transportation of the C. & O. Mr. Rawn is Division Superintendent at present.

During the 25th annual meeting of the North American Turnbund at Cincinnati, June 21st to 26th, the C. & O. will sell excursion tickets at all points for this occasion at one fair for round trip.

There will on the 1st of July begin a new order of things on the Chesapeake and Ohio. Mr. J. T. Harahan, General Manager, will take charge of traffic matter, both freight and passenger, as well as of transportation, and the freight and passenger departments will report to him instead of President Ingalls. This arrangement puts a vast deal of work on Mr. Harahan's shoulders, but from all accounts they are quite able to bear the burden.—Commercial Gazette.

Religious Services Held By All Denominations.

BUT LITTLE WORK WAS DONE.

The Loss of Life is Now Placed at Four Thousand One Hundred and Twenty-Five—Prompt Work in Rebuilding the Place—Next Sabbath a Day Set for a Special Thanksgiving.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 17.—Johnstown citizens have settled down to their routine life again. There was almost a total suspension of work in the Cone-maugh valley yesterday and the day was spent very quietly. There was no improvement in the weather. During the early morning hours a heavy rain fell. About 9 o'clock the clouds rolled away, and the sun came out bright and strong and a few moments later the mercury registered 80 degrees.

ST. JOHN'S CATHOLIC CHURCH.
[From a Photograph.]

Religious services were held by all denominations. Nearly all of the services, were from necessity, conducted in the open air. The sermons and addresses counseled the people to be brave and keep up heart.

It is understood that polling places will be open here on Tuesday to give the residents a chance to vote on the constitutional amendment.

Removing the D. B.

About 150 men were working at the gorge to make a wider opening in the debris. Seven hoisting engines were working all day, and as a result the channel opening is now over twenty feet wide. A hundred other men were engaged in searching for dead bodies, and six were recovered during the day. None were identified. Late in the evening a large quantity of oil was poured over the debris below the stone railroad bridge and the torch applied. At 9 o'clock there was a sheet of flame twenty feet high and twenty yards in length along both banks of the river. A careful search for dead bodies was made before torches were applied. Gen. Hastings having issued orders that no human remains shall be burned where it is possible to avoid it.

Late last night rain began falling again, but it is not yet heavy enough to interfere with the fires now raging.

Less Than Five Thousand Lost.

Col. Rogers, who is in charge of the bureau of registration, reports to Gen. Hastings that the aggregate registration is 15,569 names. Twenty-five hundred survivors have left the locality without registering, and many others are being entertained in the vicinity who, because they were not affected by the flood, refuse to register, as they think they are not legitimately survivors. Col. Rogers estimates the survivors at 25,000, and says: "These figures are presumably approximately correct. Deducting these 25,000 survivors from the total population, leaves 4,125 lives lost. This estimate is as positive as it will probably ever be possible to give, as they are made up from careful research, house to house canvass and comparison with the proof sheets of the Johnstown directory, which was compiled just one month previous to the disaster, and is now in the hands of the printer.

Rapidly Rebuilding.

Gen. Hastings has determined that where people desire to build immediately, he will clear out their cellars and assist them to put up their buildings. A Chicago firm has been furnished money by the Chicago relief committee with which to send 150 houses here ready to place upon their foundations. These will begin to arrive in a day or two. To facilitate building schemes the Baltimore and Ohio railway and the Pennsylvania railway will construct special switches for the accommodation of the lumber trains which are now arriving. The state is to furnish carpenter tools, nails and all requisites for prompt work in rebuilding.

ONE OF THE CAMPS.

Special orders have been issued and arrangements made for rushing the work of clearing away the debris with all possible dispatch. If expectations are realized, and a few days of favorable weather intervenes, there will be but little work left undone by next Saturday night. So confident is Gen. Hastings of this that he has expressed the determination of asking, during the week, that twenty-five ministers of various denominations visit Johnstown next Sabbath and hold special thanksgiving services for the saved from the late visitation.

Looking for Sickness.

The delay in the arrival of Governor

Deaver's commission is creating a great deal of dissatisfaction to both citizens and those interested in the relief fund.

The state board of health is putting in a great deal of its time building reporters. It is said that its members and the physicians generally look for a large increase in sickness. This is why they are advising tenants to leave. Another reason is that many of the wrecked and damaged houses are to be fired and burned within a few days, while others are to be dynamited.

There are now about 240 men in the employ of the board of health. The majority of them are laborers employed in getting out and burning the bodies of animals, disinfecting the houses and cleaning up generally. The others are the physicians who are making the survey and are attending to the sick.

Viewing the Broken Dam.

PITTSBURG, June 17.—Sunday morning a special train over the Pennsylvania left this city for South Fork. On board were fifty newspaper men of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, and a number of railroad and city officials. The purpose of the excursion was to view what remains of the wrecked dam and the washed out valley below. By the middle of next week a double track will have been completed to Altoona, and the "limited" will run again on its regular schedule. About 4,000 men are at work on the reconstruction of the road. The progress of the work has been almost phenomenal.

HEAVY HAIL STORM.

A Great Amount of Damage Done in Berkeley County, West Virginia.

MARTINSBURG, W. Va., June 17.—A very heavy storm passed over the southwestern part of Berkeley county yesterday evening. A terrible gale of wind that did great damage, was followed by a terrific thunder storm. This was followed by a heavy hail storm that added greatly to the destructiveness. The hail stones lay in some places three or four inches deep. Crops and trees are ruined. Live stock was badly bruised and in some instances killed. Several houses and barns were wrecked by the wind. No loss of life has yet been reported.

Owing to the lateness of the hour which the storm occurred, details are meagre.

A Cyclone in Ligonier, Indiana.

LIGONIER, Ind., June 17.—A terrific cyclone passed through this town Sunday afternoon, tearing down shade trees and unroofing houses along its path. The fine brick dwelling of J. M. Betts was nearly destroyed, and the new residence of W. E. Harding is a total wreck. The Ligonier hotel and a number of other buildings were unroofed. The bridge across Elkhart river was blown down, and hundreds of shade trees, fences, etc., were destroyed. The loss will be heavy.

Flood and Cyclone in Kansas.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 17.—Meagre details have just been received of a flood and cyclone in Kansas. Uniontown is supposed to have been swept away.

Base Ball.

At Brooklyn—Brooklyn 3, Cincinnati 4. At Philadelphia—Athletics 5, St. Louis 10. Columbus—No game; rain. SATURDAY'S BASE BALL.—Columbus 16, Kansas City 3; Baltimore 4, Louisville 2; Indianapolis 16, Pittsburgh 11; Boston 3, Washington 2; Chicago 5, Cleveland 4.

Weather Indications.

Rain, stationary temperature, followed by slightly warmer, southerly winds.

FINANCE AND COMMERCE.

Quotations for the Money, Stock, Produce and Cattle Market for June 15.

NEW YORK.—Money 2 per cent. Exchange steady; governments steady. Currency sixes, 118 bid; four coupons, 129½ bid; four-and-a-halfs, 109½ bid. The opening of the stock market this morning was quiet, but weak, and the first prices showed declines from last evening's final figures of from ¼ to ½ per cent, the latter in Lake Shore. The grangers and New England stocks were the only active shares, and the remainder were quiet and dull and without feature of importance. Atchinson and Burlington were strong, and advanced ½ per cent, each in the first hour, and the rest of the list recovered the early decline. After 11 o'clock prices reacted on the unfavorable showing of the bank statement and some selling to realize. The reserves, according to the bank statement, have decreased $452,750. The close was about steady at a slight decline for the day in most cases. The sales amounted to 109,409 shares.
